

Guiding Principles for Parents of Hockey Canada

The quality of a player's hockey experience is determined by their relationships with teammates, coaches, officials and parents.

Openness between parents and the hockey community will create an awareness and sensitivity to the problems and expectations of each.

The hockey journey of your son/daughter is enhanced greatly by your support and commitment.

Parents have an enormous influence on players' experiences.

Fortunately for most, parents are great sources of love, support and encouragement.

The secret of all enjoying our game lies in respecting each other when there is a disagreement or a conflict.

Expressing one's feelings and opinions in a respectful manner is a must.

Parents of value regularly remind their sons and daughters that doing ones best is more important than being the best.

Our life in the hockey arena is to experience the game as part of the total education that young people need to prepare for the future and that there must be a balance between hockey and life.
